

Clothing! Remember that near one-half our first floor is our Clothing Department, which means a larger and better stock than any two houses in town carry. Men's Suits $3.50. G. W. GUNN.

WISCONSIN.

It matters not what style price Ladies' or Misses' Wear may want, we can suit up. G. W. GUNN.

Aut inveniam viam, aut faciam.

LOUISA, LAWRENCE COUNTY, KENTUCKY, NOVEMBER 4, 1892.

M. F. CONLEY, Publisher.

VOL. VIII, NO. 10.

NEWS ITEMS.

George Graham, a northern white man, was shot to death by Joe Dierksen, a colored democrat, near Madison, Wis.

It is stated on good authority that the prince of Wales and his son, the duke of York, will visit the Chicago Columbian exposition.

Anna Farnell, the great leader's sister, has brought suit against a Strand hotel keeper for ejecting her after having let her a room.

H. Collins and wife, colored, of Chicago, were found dead in bed Wednesday morning. They were asphyxiated by escaping fuel gas.

The Guinevere city council, at a called session Wednesday, passed resolutions of sympathy for President Harrison in the death of his wife.

The controller of the currency Wednesday authorized the Delaware county National bank of Muncie, Ind., to begin business with a capital of $100,000.

At Paris, Ky., a Kentucky Central train ran over and killed W. A. Cleary's five-year-old trotting mare Cynthia, by Cyclone, dam by Bismarck. She was valued at $1,500.

J. L. Spurr, the U. S. deputy revenue collector, ambushed and shot by moonshiners in Lincoln county some days ago, died in Nashville, Tenn., Thursday night.

Monday, November 28, the cruiser hitherto known as No. 7 will be launched, and then, for the first time, she will bear the name of "Cincinnati" by right of birth.

The dominion government is reported preparing a memorial to the imperial authorities asking that Canada be released from the provisions of the Borneo protectorate convention.

Mary Walton, aged 30, living at Burton, Mo., was killed by a Wheeling and Lake Erie train while waiting along the track. She stepped on the track to avoid a P. Wayne train and met death instantly.

Two printers, Boris Gofstahl, of Terre Haute, Ind., and John Glesner, of St. Louis, Mo., were found dead in their room at Chicago Wednesday morning. They were asphyxiated by escaping fuel gas.

Enlilo Gaster, Spain's eloquent and distinguished prime minister, will, in all probability, be the orator on the memorial day, May 1, next, when the World's Columbian exposition opens its gates to the world.

The London Chronicle's Rome correspondent says: "The pope has acceded to the request of a deputation of Italian cardinals that he will not appoint any client foreign cardinal to risk the election of an Italian pope."

Nina Marshall, a notorious resident of St. Louis, is said to be trying to work off her paternity on a well-known socialist and pretty baby, such after the style of the Eva Bay Hamilton sensation in New York three years ago.

The report that the German government will raise additional revenue by increasing the import and excise duties on tobacco, is considered by the Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung.

A cow belonging to Josephine Black, of Zelina, Ind., recently gave birth to a calf with two distinct and well-developed tails. Evidently, from the abundant mass of tissue, there will never be any risk of its becoming a tailless animal.

The Ladies' Hermitage association, of Nashville, Tenn., of which Mrs. Harrison was an honorary member, sent to Indianapolis for the funeral a beautiful wreath, twenty-four inches in diameter, composed of pink roses and maidenhair ferns.

All the lines of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy which have been occupied by the American express and the Wells, Fargo & Co. will, on and after January, be occupied by the Adams Express Co., with which a contract has been made.

The present term of the Philadelphia criminal court presents a ghastly array of homicide cases. Sixteen murders, nine women and boys lying in the corridors awaiting trial. Among the victims are a number of men who killed women.

The largest run of mackerel known at Providence, Mass., for years, took place the other night. Every net was in the bay, and it is estimated that 500,000 large and medium fish were taken. A number of nets sank with the weight of a fish.

A colored convict went into the room of a lady near Heidelberg, Tex., and attempted to assault her, but she gave the alarm and he escaped. He was afterward captured and shot to death by her relatives and neighbors.

Secretary A. A. Graham, of the Ohio Archaeological and Historical society, has returned from Chicago. He reports that while in Chicago he was elected Ex-President of the society.

While the horses were at the point in the third race at Hawthorne, Chicago, Friday, a windstorm struck the stand and shook it. There was a small panic stopped by the flag falling, after Tom Williams, a track man, had been crushed on the stand and had his arm and shoulder broken.

The house of correction at Goodfellow was burned Thursday afternoon. The fire spread with such rapidity that many of the five hundred prisoners had to jump for their lives. Twelve are known to have been burned to death and others are missing. Many of those who escaped are severely injured.

Alfred W. Wenway was appointed receiver of the order of the Eagle by Judge Allen, of the Supreme court at Boston, Friday, by agreement with the parties in interest. The liabilities are $400,000 and the assets $200,000. Certain irregularities were alleged against the officers, but these have been withdrawn.

In the municipal election at Newport, R. I., Horton, republican, is elected mayor over Honey, democrat, the present incumbent, by a majority of 494 in a total vote of 3,770. The republicans also elected three out of five aldermen and ten out of fifteen councilmen, thus giving them control of both branches of the council.

Liquors will be sold in Jackson park during the World's fair. After a long discussion the national commission decided that it would not interfere with contracts made by the Chicago directors for the sale of light beverages and stimulants.

Twenty-five years ago King George and the Grand Duchess Olga, eldest daughter of Grand Duke Constantine, of Russia, were married, and their all new wedding was celebrated at Athens, Thursday. The occasion was marked by no great pomp, though the day was observed as a general holiday throughout the country.

FATAL EXPLOSION.

Three Men Killed, Another Missing and Several Seriously Injured. WASHINGTON, Oct. 31.—The chimney of the steamboat Walcott, belonging to the Potomac River Steamboat Co., blew off at 11 o'clock Sunday morning, killing three men, possibly four, and more or less seriously injuring three others.

The boat was on her return trip to Washington, and when off Maryland Point, about fifty miles down the river, the accident happened.

Alexander Tolman and James Johnson, colored, freemen, were instantly killed by flying fragments, and William Clark, a colored boatblack, was blown off the boat by the shock and drowned.

Another colored man is missing, and it is feared that he met the fate of the boatblack, E. Gorman (white), an assistant engineer, was badly bruised about the head and arms. He was brought to his home in Alexandria, William Motley and William Carney, colored deck hands, were badly scalded and otherwise injured.

They were brought to Washington, and are now at Providence hospital. The Walcott was only slightly damaged, and immediately after the accident was towed to a landing at Quantico, about forty miles from Washington. The Walcott was used principally as a freight boat, stopping at all the Potomac river landings for a distance of eighty-five miles down, and occasionally transporting passengers.

THE SUNKEN ROMANIA.

Holmes of the Victoria Hotel Washed Ashore. The Vessel Going to Pieces. LONDON, Oct. 31.—The bodies of the victims of the Roumania are being washed ashore at Cape Greco. Most of the bodies are in night attire, showing that the unfortunate were aroused from sleep only to encounter death in the terrible storm.

The sea is still running heavily, and it is impossible to approach the wreck, which lies in a most dangerous situation, and whose victims are rapidly being blown to pieces. The cargo and other wreck from the vessel is floating around in the vicinity.

Much of it has been ashore and seized by the inhabitants of that region, some of whom are little better than pirates. Wrecks are not uncommon at Cape Greco, which projects into the Aegean a sort of trap for any vessel driven in shore while making for Lissabon or Gibraltar.

The latest information places the number of those perished at 100, and that nine persons were saved. Among the passengers were many British officers with their families. The tremendous sea carried a number of them to death, while others perished in the boats.

An Opera House Burned.

CLEVELAND, O., Oct. 31.—First broke out in the opera house at the Grand opera house at 9 o'clock Saturday morning, and at 10 o'clock the beautiful play house was in ruins. The opera house fronts on Sheriff street but its entrance is through the heart block on East street. It is a large building, with three stories. Every steamer in the city was called to the fire on the first alarm and twenty or more streams were poured into it from all sides. The loss will not fall short of $750,000. The opera house "Superb" was the play this week.

Fire in a Pennsylvania Town.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Oct. 31.—A fire broke out in the city of Erie, Pa., on the Pittsburgh and Western railroad, was practically wiped out by fire Saturday morning. The fire started in the restaurant of Patrick Murphy, on Main street, at 5 o'clock, and spread in all directions, burning for two hours. It was a fire of a very serious nature, and there was a scarcity of water. In less than two hours seventeen houses had been destroyed.

Preparing to Rebuild.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Oct. 31.—The scene of Milwaukee's great fire was visited Sunday by fully one hundred and fifty thousand people. Not only was more than half the population of the city there during the day, but thousands came from surrounding towns. All of the important firms burned out will resume business at once, and many are already preparing to rebuild.

Like the Dalton Gang.

CECILIA, Mo., Oct. 31.—The town of San Juan, on the Mexican National railroad, was the scene Saturday night of a bloody battle between a band of twelve outlaws, under the leadership of the late John Dillinger, and a company of government rurales of the place. Three bandits were fatally wounded and three captured.

The Rooster Discovered.

DENVER, Col., Oct. 31.—One of the Colorado Weaver electors, Friday, forwarded his withdrawal to the state canvassing board, giving as the reason he could not allow his name to appear under the democratic roster. The latter emblem has been officially adopted by the people's party now that the Cleveland electors have withdrawn.

Tennessee Militia Ordered Home.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Oct. 31.—Tennessee's standing army was being withdrawn from the mines, and Gen. Carnes' command, under Adm. S. R. Kyle, are now on their way from camp to their homes. This leaves the regular garrison under Capt. Anderson at Camp Anderson and at Oliver Springs. There are about two hundred soldiers returning.

Cleveland's Registration.

CLEVELAND, O., Oct. 31.—Registration in the city is very high this fall and indicates a full vote despite the lack of apparent interest. The total up to Friday night is 44,000 and about 10,000 names were put on the list Saturday. Last year the total registration was but 40,000.

Vessels Overdue.

MONTREAL, Oct. 31.—The utmost anxiety is expressed here for the safety of some of the Montreal boats that are out in the storm. The steamship Flaxey, from Montreal for Bristol, has not been heard from, and is a week overdue.

Getting Ready For Death.

SPRINGFIELD, O., Oct. 31.—Rev. J. P. Bishop, a retired Methodist minister, is dying of consumption. He has created a sensation by refusing a coffin and making all arrangements for his prospective funeral.

Ohio Town Partially Burned.

NORTH BATAVIA, O., Oct. 31.—Half the town of Batavia, near here, was destroyed by fire Saturday morning. Loss heavy, with little insurance. Dealer in Henry county, and has 1,000 inhabitants. It is the junction for the B. & O. G. I. & D. railroads.

ADLAI'S LETTER.

Democratic Candidate for Vice President Accepts. CHICAGO, Oct. 31.—Adlai Stevenson, democratic candidate for the vice presidency, has sent the following letter of acceptance to the president of the national democratic convention:

"CHICAGO, N. Y., Oct. 30, 1902. "To the Hon. William L. Wilson, Chairman, etc. "When, in the presence of twenty thousand of my countrymen, I accepted the nomination for vice president by the convention over which you presided, I promised to indicate by letter, in a more formal manner, my acceptance of the nomination tendered me by the assembled representatives of the democratic party of the United States.

"I am glad that I have been engaged constantly in the discussion, before the people of my country, of the issues which are before the convention and represented by our candidate for president, Grover Cleveland. Opportunity has thus been afforded me to do with the ease I would like the more formal manner of a candidate for the national office, the treatment of the issues now before the country for discussion, and to state as completely as I can to the people of my country my position and give the emphasis of my own conviction.

"The greatest power conferred upon human government is that of taxation. All the great states of the world, for instance, derive their power from the right to tax, a right which should always be limited by the consent of the people, or of some part of the people as expressed in order that the remainder may enjoy the benefits of the system without being burdened by its weight. It is the duty of the government to use this power to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number.

"The greatest power conferred upon human government is that of taxation. All the great states of the world, for instance, derive their power from the right to tax, a right which should always be limited by the consent of the people, or of some part of the people as expressed in order that the remainder may enjoy the benefits of the system without being burdened by its weight. It is the duty of the government to use this power to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number.

"The greatest power conferred upon human government is that of taxation. All the great states of the world, for instance, derive their power from the right to tax, a right which should always be limited by the consent of the people, or of some part of the people as expressed in order that the remainder may enjoy the benefits of the system without being burdened by its weight. It is the duty of the government to use this power to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number.

"The greatest power conferred upon human government is that of taxation. All the great states of the world, for instance, derive their power from the right to tax, a right which should always be limited by the consent of the people, or of some part of the people as expressed in order that the remainder may enjoy the benefits of the system without being burdened by its weight. It is the duty of the government to use this power to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number.

"The greatest power conferred upon human government is that of taxation. All the great states of the world, for instance, derive their power from the right to tax, a right which should always be limited by the consent of the people, or of some part of the people as expressed in order that the remainder may enjoy the benefits of the system without being burdened by its weight. It is the duty of the government to use this power to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number.

"The greatest power conferred upon human government is that of taxation. All the great states of the world, for instance, derive their power from the right to tax, a right which should always be limited by the consent of the people, or of some part of the people as expressed in order that the remainder may enjoy the benefits of the system without being burdened by its weight. It is the duty of the government to use this power to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number.

"The greatest power conferred upon human government is that of taxation. All the great states of the world, for instance, derive their power from the right to tax, a right which should always be limited by the consent of the people, or of some part of the people as expressed in order that the remainder may enjoy the benefits of the system without being burdened by its weight. It is the duty of the government to use this power to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number.

"The greatest power conferred upon human government is that of taxation. All the great states of the world, for instance, derive their power from the right to tax, a right which should always be limited by the consent of the people, or of some part of the people as expressed in order that the remainder may enjoy the benefits of the system without being burdened by its weight. It is the duty of the government to use this power to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number.

"The greatest power conferred upon human government is that of taxation. All the great states of the world, for instance, derive their power from the right to tax, a right which should always be limited by the consent of the people, or of some part of the people as expressed in order that the remainder may enjoy the benefits of the system without being burdened by its weight. It is the duty of the government to use this power to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number.

"The greatest power conferred upon human government is that of taxation. All the great states of the world, for instance, derive their power from the right to tax, a right which should always be limited by the consent of the people, or of some part of the people as expressed in order that the remainder may enjoy the benefits of the system without being burdened by its weight. It is the duty of the government to use this power to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number.

"The greatest power conferred upon human government is that of taxation. All the great states of the world, for instance, derive their power from the right to tax, a right which should always be limited by the consent of the people, or of some part of the people as expressed in order that the remainder may enjoy the benefits of the system without being burdened by its weight. It is the duty of the government to use this power to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number.

"The greatest power conferred upon human government is that of taxation. All the great states of the world, for instance, derive their power from the right to tax, a right which should always be limited by the consent of the people, or of some part of the people as expressed in order that the remainder may enjoy the benefits of the system without being burdened by its weight. It is the duty of the government to use this power to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number.

"The greatest power conferred upon human government is that of taxation. All the great states of the world, for instance, derive their power from the right to tax, a right which should always be limited by the consent of the people, or of some part of the people as expressed in order that the remainder may enjoy the benefits of the system without being burdened by its weight. It is the duty of the government to use this power to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number.

"The greatest power conferred upon human government is that of taxation. All the great states of the world, for instance, derive their power from the right to tax, a right which should always be limited by the consent of the people, or of some part of the people as expressed in order that the remainder may enjoy the benefits of the system without being burdened by its weight. It is the duty of the government to use this power to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number.

"The greatest power conferred upon human government is that of taxation. All the great states of the world, for instance, derive their power from the right to tax, a right which should always be limited by the consent of the people, or of some part of the people as expressed in order that the remainder may enjoy the benefits of the system without being burdened by its weight. It is the duty of the government to use this power to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number.

"The greatest power conferred upon human government is that of taxation. All the great states of the world, for instance, derive their power from the right to tax, a right which should always be limited by the consent of the people, or of some part of the people as expressed in order that the remainder may enjoy the benefits of the system without being burdened by its weight. It is the duty of the government to use this power to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number.

"The greatest power conferred upon human government is that of taxation. All the great states of the world, for instance, derive their power from the right to tax, a right which should always be limited by the consent of the people, or of some part of the people as expressed in order that the remainder may enjoy the benefits of the system without being burdened by its weight. It is the duty of the government to use this power to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number.

"The greatest power conferred upon human government is that of taxation. All the great states of the world, for instance, derive their power from the right to tax, a right which should always be limited by the consent of the people, or of some part of the people as expressed in order that the remainder may enjoy the benefits of the system without being burdened by its weight. It is the duty of the government to use this power to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number.

"The greatest power conferred upon human government is that of taxation. All the great states of the world, for instance, derive their power from the right to tax, a right which should always be limited by the consent of the people, or of some part of the people as expressed in order that the remainder may enjoy the benefits of the system without being burdened by its weight. It is the duty of the government to use this power to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number.

"The greatest power conferred upon human government is that of taxation. All the great states of the world, for instance, derive their power from the right to tax, a right which should always be limited by the consent of the people, or of some part of the people as expressed in order that the remainder may enjoy the benefits of the system without being burdened by its weight. It is the duty of the government to use this power to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number.

"The greatest power conferred upon human government is that of taxation. All the great states of the world, for instance, derive their power from the right to tax, a right which should always be limited by the consent of the people, or of some part of the people as expressed in order that the remainder may enjoy the benefits of the system without being burdened by its weight. It is the duty of the government to use this power to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number.

"The greatest power conferred upon human government is that of taxation. All the great states of the world, for instance, derive their power from the right to tax, a right which should always be limited by the consent of the people, or of some part of the people as expressed in order that the remainder may enjoy the benefits of the system without being burdened by its weight. It is the duty of the government to use this power to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number.

"The greatest power conferred upon human government is that of taxation. All the great states of the world, for instance, derive their power from the right to tax, a right which should always be limited by the consent of the people, or of some part of the people as expressed in order that the remainder may enjoy the benefits of the system without being burdened by its weight. It is the duty of the government to use this power to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number.

"The greatest power conferred upon human government is that of taxation. All the great states of the world, for instance, derive their power from the right to tax, a right which should always be limited by the consent of the people, or of some part of the people as expressed in order that the remainder may enjoy the benefits of the system without being burdened by its weight. It is the duty of the government to use this power to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number.

"The greatest power conferred upon human government is that of taxation. All the great states of the world, for instance, derive their power from the right to tax, a right which should always be limited by the consent of the people, or of some part of the people as expressed in order that the remainder may enjoy the benefits of the system without being burdened by its weight. It is the duty of the government to use this power to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number.

"The greatest power conferred upon human government is that of taxation. All the great states of the world, for instance, derive their power from the right to tax, a right which should always be limited by the consent of the people, or of some part of the people as expressed in order that the remainder may enjoy the benefits of the system without being burdened by its weight. It is the duty of the government to use this power to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number.

"The greatest power conferred upon human government is that of taxation. All the great states of the world, for instance, derive their power from the right to tax, a right which should always be limited by the consent of the people, or of some part of the people as expressed in order that the remainder may enjoy the benefits of the system without being burdened by its weight. It is the duty of the government to use this power to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number.

"The greatest power conferred upon human government is that of taxation. All the great states of the world, for instance, derive their power from the right to tax, a right which should always be limited by the consent of the people, or of some part of the people as expressed in order that the remainder may enjoy the benefits of the system without being burdened by its weight. It is the duty of the government to use this power to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number.

"The greatest power conferred upon human government is that of taxation. All the great states of the world, for instance, derive their power from the right to tax, a right which should always be limited by the consent of the people, or of some part of the people as expressed in order that the remainder may enjoy the benefits of the system without being burdened by its weight. It is the duty of the government to use this power to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number.

"The greatest power conferred upon human government is that of taxation. All the great states of the world, for instance, derive their power from the right to tax, a right which should always be limited by the consent of the people, or of some part of the people as expressed in order that the remainder may enjoy the benefits of the system without being burdened by its weight. It is the duty of the government to use this power to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number.

"The greatest power conferred upon human government is that of taxation. All the great states of the world, for instance, derive their power from the right to tax, a right which should always be limited by the consent of the people, or of some part of the people as expressed in order that the remainder may enjoy the benefits of the system without being burdened by its weight. It is the duty of the government to use this power to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number.

"The greatest power conferred upon human government is that of taxation. All the great states of the world, for instance, derive their power from the right to tax, a right which should always be limited by the consent of the people, or of some part of the people as expressed in order that the remainder may enjoy the benefits of the system without being burdened by its weight. It is the duty of the government to use this power to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number.

"The greatest power conferred upon human government is that of taxation. All the great states of the world, for instance, derive their power from the right to tax, a right which should always be limited by the consent of the people, or of some part of the people as expressed in order that the remainder may enjoy the benefits of the system without being burdened by its weight. It is the duty of the government to use this power to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number.

"The greatest power conferred upon human government is that of taxation. All the great states of the world, for instance, derive their power from the right to tax, a right which should always be limited by the consent of the people, or of some part of the people as expressed in order that the remainder may enjoy the benefits of the system without being burdened by its weight. It is the duty of the government to use this power to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number.

"The greatest power conferred upon human government is that of taxation. All the great states of the world, for instance, derive their power from the right to tax, a right which should always be limited by the consent of the people, or of some part of the people as expressed in order that the remainder may enjoy the benefits of the system without being burdened by its weight. It is the duty of the government to use this power to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number.

"The greatest power conferred upon human government is that of taxation. All the great states of the world, for instance, derive their power from the right to tax, a right which should always be limited by the consent of the people, or of some part of the people as expressed in order that the remainder may enjoy the benefits of the system without being burdened by its weight. It is the duty of the government to use this power to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number.

"The greatest power conferred upon human government is that of taxation. All the great states of the world, for instance, derive their power from the right to tax, a right which should always be limited by the consent of the people, or of some part of the people as expressed in order that the remainder may enjoy the benefits of the system without being burdened by its weight. It is the duty of the government to use this power to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number.

"The greatest power conferred upon human government is that of taxation. All the great states of the world, for instance, derive their power from the right to tax, a right which should always be limited by the consent of the people, or of some part of the people as expressed in order that the remainder may enjoy the benefits of the system without being burdened by its weight. It is the duty of the government to use this power to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number.

"The greatest power conferred upon human government is that of taxation. All the great states of the world, for instance, derive their power from the right to tax, a right which should always be limited by the consent of the people, or of some part of the people as expressed in order that the remainder may enjoy the benefits of the system without being burdened by its weight. It is the duty of the government to use this power to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number.

"The greatest power conferred upon human government is that of taxation. All the great states of the world, for instance, derive their power from the right to tax, a right which should always be limited by the consent of the people, or of some part of the people as expressed in order that the remainder may enjoy the benefits of the system without being burdened by its weight. It is the duty of the government to use this power to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number.

"The greatest power conferred upon human government is that of taxation. All the great states of the world, for instance, derive their power from the right to tax, a right which should always be limited by the consent of the people, or of some part of the people as expressed in order that the remainder may enjoy the benefits of the system without being burdened by its weight. It is the duty of the government to use this power to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number.

"The greatest power conferred upon human government is that of taxation. All the great states of the world, for instance, derive their power from the right to tax, a right which should always be limited by the consent of the people, or of some part of the people as expressed in order that the remainder may enjoy the benefits of the system without being burdened by its weight. It is the duty of the government to use this power to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number, and to the end of securing the greatest good for the greatest number.

FIVE KILLED.

Barnesville, N. C., the Scene of a Political Battle—The Outcome of an Attempt to Prevent a Democrat From Speaking. RALEIGH, N. C., Oct. 31.—Dr. George W. Sanderlin, state auditor, returned Sunday from a canvassing tour west of the blue regions in this state. He had an appointment to speak at Barnesville, county seat of Yancey. A group of desperadoes in that county had sworn that no democratic speaker should be heard, and when they found that Dr. Sanderlin was to speak, determined to assassinate him. On the day of the speaking a very large crowd gathered, composed of men from all parts of the county. It is said a number of east Tennessee desperadoes were also present, as well as some from Mitchell county.

The speaking was conducted in the courthouse, and the room was well filled. There was a large crowd outside, composed of republicans, who renewed the old